Dear Miss Mistral:

Miss Turnbull came in this morning and is naturally a little concerned at the indecisive position in which she finds herself. I think we owe it to her to say that another translator has been found if in your opinion her work is insufficiently meritorious. On the other hand, she has done a substantial amount of work and if you would like to have these poems sent to you for examination by your advisors, we shall be glad so to arrange it.

I would like to know how much Mrs. Biddle did and what, if any, translations have been made by others.

Sincerely yours,

Armitage Watkins
