Dear Joan:

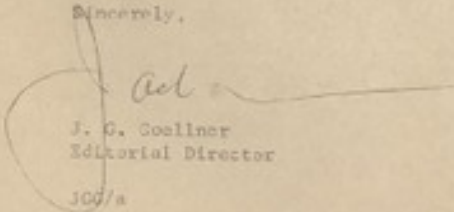

Arlene tells me she sent ideas for the basic design of the book to Antonio Frasconi two weeks ago. Today he called her to report that he is well along on the woodcuts, will have one in our hands later this month and the balance finished by mid-October at the latest. Based on what he worked out with Arlene, we've made some final adjustments in the design to better accommodate the illustrations and have ordered sample pages. These should be ready in two weeks and will, of course, then be submitted to you for approval all round.

Meanwhile, Howard Cline writes that Aguilera has submitted a draft of his introduction and is presently making some revisions in the light of Howard's critique. The final draft then goes to Doris for her approval.

At this point Doris has given us all of the translations. The translator's foreword and the introductory pieces are still to come, but this should create no real problem. When we met in New York I told Doris we could begin setting without this stuff, and we intend to begin as soon as the samples are approved. We can then set the foreword and introductions at galley proof stage. If Doris manages to finish them on schedule, the book will stay on the track, and I've no doubt at all that she will manage.

I imagine you'll be off to Frankfurt very soon. Have a good trip. I wish I were going this year.

Sincerely,

J. G. Coellner
