Dear Miss Dana:

I am working on a college textbook on English and American poetry, but I would like to include a few translated poems, two by Gabriela Mistral: Interrogaciones and Excursus. Although they are not in your Selected Poems, a book I greatly admire, they have been translated for me by James Graham-Lujan, the translator of Lorca's plays. He suggests that if you require some reference, you might ask Mildred Adams, who he thinks will speak in his behalf. I have chosen these particular poems because they fit thematic developments in my text. I also think they are great poems, beautifully translated.

May I have your permission to include them?

Sincerely yours,

Stanley A. Clayes
Professor of English
