Dear Ms Dana:

I am preparing an ANTHOLOGY OF HISPANIC POETRY with English and Spanish versions of poems to appear on opposite pages. The finest English versions made over the years will be used. The collection is to be published by the Louisiana State University Press, which has already published the standard histories of both Spanish and Spanish American literature, and which is also in process of publishing the poetry of Antonio Machado in English.

I am most anxious to use two poems of Gabriela Mistral translated by you: "Los Ayudadores" and "Una piadosa," which appear in Selected poems of Gabriela Mistral, Johns Hopkins Univ. Press. I would like your permission to use both your English translations and the Spanish originals. In addition to this, I respectfully request also your permission to include and to translate four other poems of Gabriela: El ruego, one soneto de la muerte, the sonnet on El pensador de Rodin, and La flor del aire. This last is translated by Langston Hughes, and I hope to obtain from him permission to use his English version. What I need from you is permission to use and to ~~xxx~~ put into English the above four poems. I might add that I frequently visited Gabriela when she was in Santa Barbara. Of course, any anthology without her poems would not really be an anthology.

Sincerely,
John A. Crow
