Dear Miss Dana:

It was nice to hear from you. As I said in my previous letter I was not sure about the copyrights of Desolación, Tala, and Lagar; that was the reason I did not ask your permission at that time. I have already written to Miss Daves asking for the necessary forms.

Since my biographic and critical essays went over the limit I had from the publisher, the section devoted to texts by Gabriela will be very brief: 25 pages. In these pages I will have to include some of her Pecados.

My biographical essay is, of course, very limited. I tried to check all dates comparing various sources. Some facts stand out more than others because my knowledge of them is of a personal nature, or because they interest me more deeply than others about which I have only references in books and articles. I try to present Gabriela as a human being, first, and then as a writer of international significance. The basic feeling in everything I write about her is of affection. I hope this comes through in the pages you are going to read. I will appreciate very much any comments or suggestions you may have about my work. The copy I am sending is not too clear. Unfortunately it is the only one I have at the moment.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

Fernando Alegria
