Dear Doris:

I'm back in D.C. drying out after N.Y. By now Gabriela has probably taken off for parts with sun. I was really shocked to find her in such a weak condition--she was quite a different person from the Gabriela I knew in Brazil, but that was before the tragedy of her nephew--the poor woman. Thanks very much for arranging for me to see her. I think she answered one or two of the questions I had-but I could not insist, she kept wandering off. I'm sure when her health is better physically her concentration will be better. I did enjoy very much the incident of the discovery of the kitchen--Gabriela wandered in and out of closets, gave up, just as I glanced around a corner and alas! the kitchen. That Castillo woman read torrents of tropical overflow after Victoria Kent left. (Do give my regards to her, I liked her very much.)

One of the possibilities that Gabriela mentioned was retirement. Why doesn't she? She really must be taken in hand.

You mentioned some translations of Gabriela in an anthology of Nisbet and Nisbet? something of that sound, what was that?

Another thing: Gabriela will be 65 next year is anyone preparing an homenaje?

Gabriela also asked me about Onís--at a meeting yesterday one of the Columbia profs told me he will retire next year and go to Puerto Rico.

I will find out from Aguilera the title of that anthology that contains some poems from LAGAR; perhaps it contains "La Isella".
