

Foward ELEGY

To the woman of Chile by Arturo Torres Rioseco.
Translated by Magda Arce.

Leave with me
your slender figure
like a naked lily.

Leave with me
your cadenced word
so full of anguish and mist.

Leave with me
your eyes of mystery
that look for the warmth of the ardent sea.

Your desolated life
so rich in tenderness dying on an everlasting sand.

Leave with me
the ashes of your soul
and the rhythm of your body.

Woman of Chile
woman of sun and snow
what do you hide behind your silences?

What everlasting negation that I always look for and cannot find?

What waterfalls
run on your dark skin?

What cold lillies
are blossoming in your hair?

You, daughter of dawn,
of light that dazzles you Made all in silver with a scent of boughs in your fingers with a scent of roses on your lips with a rhythm of anguish in your voice with a sensation of dawn's cold death to come with your kiss.

I have walked with you along the sea, and the sea was in your lips,
and the sea was in my song and you went into the sea, cold and deep, and that sea was no longer our sea.
