Understanding when the Abuse Begins

Understanding when the Abuse Begins: A Study of the Development of Abuse in the Family. By David Finkelhor and Nancy Browne. New York: Guilford Press, 1985. Pp. 288. $24.95. ISBN 0-89859-280-0.

This book is a collection of essays by David Finkelhor and Nancy Browne, who are both prominent figures in the field of child abuse. The book is a result of a research project that was funded by the National Institute of Mental Health. The project was designed to explore the development of abuse in the family, and to identify the factors that are associated with the onset of abuse. The book is divided into three main sections: the first section discusses the development of abuse in the family, the second section discusses the factors that are associated with the onset of abuse, and the third section discusses the consequences of abuse for the child.

The first section, "The Development of Abuse in the Family," is a collection of essays by David Finkelhor and Nancy Browne. The essays in this section explore the development of abuse in the family, and identify the factors that are associated with the onset of abuse. The second section, "Factors Associated with the Onset of Abuse," is a collection of essays by David Finkelhor and Nancy Browne. The essays in this section explore the factors that are associated with the onset of abuse, and identify the factors that are associated with the consequences of abuse for the child. The third section, "Consequences of Abuse for the Child," is a collection of essays by David Finkelhor and Nancy Browne. The essays in this section explore the consequences of abuse for the child, and identify the factors that are associated with the onset of abuse.
