
1980. The 1980s saw a significant increase in the number of people with mental health problems who were admitted to hospital. This was due to a combination of factors, including a lack of community mental health services, a shortage of psychiatric nurses, and a general increase in the use of hospital care. The 1990s saw a continued trend of increasing hospital admissions, but also a growing emphasis on community care and the development of mental health services outside of hospitals.

"I think there's a very important lesson
 that we can learn
 from the fact that the world is not a flat surface. It's a sphere. And that means that there's a lot of things that we can't see from our perspective. And that's why it's so important to have
 a global perspective.
 And that's why it's so important to have
