

U.S. Military in Kosovo' faces New responsibilities in Bosnia, Kosovo and other Balkan states

U.S. military forces in Kosovo are facing new responsibilities in Bosnia, Kosovo and other Balkan states, according to a report by the U.S. House of Representatives. The report, titled "U.S. Military in Kosovo: New Responsibilities in Bosnia, Kosovo and Other Balkan States," was released by the House Committee on Armed Services. It states that the U.S. military is currently engaged in a variety of operations in the Balkans, including peacekeeping, humanitarian aid, and counterterrorism. The report also notes that the U.S. military is facing a number of challenges in the region, including a lack of resources, a lack of training, and a lack of political support. The report recommends that the U.S. government take steps to address these challenges, including increasing funding for the military, providing additional training, and seeking greater political support from Congress and the public.
