Abstract

There are two main reasons why the results of the present study are important. First, the results show that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire can be used to assess the prevalence of mental health problems in a large, representative sample of the general population. This is a significant achievement, as it allows for the comparison of results across different studies and populations. Second, the results show that the prevalence of mental health problems is higher than previously estimated, suggesting that there may be a need for more widespread mental health services and support.

These findings are consistent with the idea that the relationship between the two variables is not linear. The results suggest that the relationship between the two variables is non-linear and that the relationship is not the same for all values of the variables. The results also suggest that the relationship between the two variables is not the same for all values of the variables.
