WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

The American Medical Association has a long history of leadership in the medical profession. It has been a voice for the physician, a defender of the public interest, and a champion of the medical profession. In the past, it has been successful in many of its endeavors. But now, it faces a new challenge. The medical profession is changing rapidly, and the AMA must adapt to these changes if it is to remain relevant and effective.

The medical profession is facing a number of challenges. One of the most significant is the changing role of the physician. In the past, the physician was the central figure in the medical profession. But now, there are many other professionals who are involved in the care of the patient. This has led to a fragmentation of the medical profession, and the AMA must find a way to bring these professionals together.

The AMA must also address the issue of medical malpractice. This is a major concern for the medical profession, and the AMA has a responsibility to do something about it. It must work to reduce the number of malpractice lawsuits, and it must provide support for physicians who are being sued.
