There is a growing consensus among scholars that the economic situation in Cambodia is improving. The country has achieved a significant reduction in poverty, and the economy is growing at a steady pace. However, there are still challenges that need to be addressed, such as the need for more investment in infrastructure and the need to improve the quality of education and healthcare. The government has taken steps to address these challenges, but more needs to be done to ensure a sustainable and inclusive economic future for Cambodia.

These results suggest that the use of a single, standard, and simple questionnaire is a feasible and effective way to assess the prevalence of mental health problems in a community sample. The use of a single questionnaire also has the advantage of being cost-effective and easy to administer, which is important for large-scale community studies.

The next three questions related to the study population, which were administered after the first three items. The first question asked whether the respondent was currently employed. The second question asked whether the respondent was currently a student. The third question asked whether the respondent was currently a parent.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 100-hr, nonclinical, predoctoral internship on the self-reported confidence of students in their ability to perform various tasks associated with the practice of counseling. The study was conducted with 100 students who completed a pretest, a posttest, and a follow-up test. The results of the study indicated that the students' self-reported confidence in their ability to perform various tasks associated with the practice of counseling increased significantly from pretest to posttest and from posttest to follow-up test. The results also indicated that the students' self-reported confidence in their ability to perform various tasks associated with the practice of counseling was significantly higher than the confidence of students who did not complete the internship. The results of the study have implications for the development of predoctoral internships and for the assessment of the effectiveness of such programs.

It is important to note that the results of this study are based on a cross-sectional design, which limits the ability to establish causality. Future research should employ longitudinal designs to investigate the temporal relationships between the variables studied. Additionally, the study was conducted in a specific cultural context, and the findings may not be generalizable to other populations. Further research is needed to explore the cultural and contextual factors that may influence the relationships observed in this study.
