1. The first major problem in the development of the National Health Insurance (NHI) system is the lack of a clear vision and a strong political will. The government has not been able to create a consensus among the various stakeholders, including the private sector, the public sector, and the citizens. This has led to a fragmented and inefficient system that fails to meet the needs of the population.

2. The second major problem is the lack of sufficient funding. The government has not been able to allocate enough resources to the NHI system, which has resulted in a shortage of funds and a decline in the quality of services. This has led to a loss of confidence among the citizens and a failure to attract private investments.

3. The third major problem is the lack of a strong regulatory framework. The government has not been able to establish a clear and effective regulatory system that can ensure the quality and efficiency of the NHI system. This has led to a lack of transparency and accountability, which has further eroded the trust of the citizens.

4. The fourth major problem is the lack of a strong leadership. The government has not been able to appoint a strong and effective leader who can provide the vision and direction needed to implement the NHI system. This has led to a lack of coordination and a failure to address the various challenges facing the system.
