

Interview with the Author

When I was a child, I was always reading. My mother had a large collection of books, and I would spend hours in the library. I was particularly drawn to the stories of the great authors of the past. I would read them over and over, and I would always find something new in them. I was always a fan of the classics, and I was always looking for the next great book to read. I was always a fan of the classics, and I was always looking for the next great book to read.
