The 400,000 square km (154,440 sq miles) island and surrounding reefs are 100–150° above the 180° longitude line and provide the politicians, press, private industry and the 100,000 people, most of whom live in Suva, with a natural laboratory for the study of human impacts on the environment. It also has a long history of human habitation and has produced the first evidence of 700-year-old human settlements.
