When an individual begins to work with an employer, there is the question of what is the basis of their relationship. Is the individual hired as an employee or as an independent contractor? The distinction is crucial to the individual's rights and obligations, and it is often difficult to determine. The IRS has provided a list of factors to consider in making this determination. These factors include the degree of control exercised by the employer, the nature of the relationship, the method of payment, and the degree of integration of the individual into the employer's business. The IRS also provides a list of questions to ask in making this determination. These questions include whether the individual is hired for a specific project, whether the individual is paid by the hour or by the project, whether the individual is given a set schedule, and whether the individual is given a set location. The IRS also provides a list of factors to consider in making this determination. These factors include the degree of control exercised by the employer, the nature of the relationship, the method of payment, and the degree of integration of the individual into the employer's business.
