1990s, the number of patients receiving services from the agency increased from 10 to 120. Patients come to the agency from a hospital or another facility where they are being treated for a mental health condition. They are referred to the agency by a physician or other health care professional. The agency provides a variety of services, including individual and group therapy, case management, and crisis intervention. The agency also provides support services, such as transportation and housing assistance. The agency is a non-profit organization and is funded by the state and private donors.
