

Corporate Citizenship

As a result of the 1990s, the concept of corporate citizenship has become a widely used term. It has been defined in a number of ways, but generally refers to the idea that a corporation is a citizen of the country in which it is incorporated and should therefore be held to the same standards of responsibility as any other citizen. This includes the obligation to pay taxes, obey the law, and contribute to the community.

The concept of corporate citizenship is closely related to the idea of corporate social responsibility (CSR). CSR refers to the idea that a corporation has a responsibility to society beyond the goal of maximizing profits. This responsibility includes the obligation to treat employees fairly, to protect the environment, and to contribute to the community. Corporate citizenship is a more specific term that focuses on the corporation's relationship with the state and its obligations as a citizen.

Corporate citizenship is a relatively new concept that has gained popularity in recent years. It is based on the idea that a corporation is a citizen of the country in which it is incorporated and should therefore be held to the same standards of responsibility as any other citizen. This includes the obligation to pay taxes, obey the law, and contribute to the community. Corporate citizenship is a more specific term that focuses on the corporation's relationship with the state and its obligations as a citizen.
