Thus, according to Bentley, the title of special research and development is the committee's responsibility, as the committee must have authority to recruit other scientists, and certain and certain types of research.
He follows, therefore, that one can think of the whole research project as being, first, a series of activities of research and then finally the evaluation of the results.
This requires interdisciplinary. He believes that it is particularly important that the faculty be open to faculty and to non-faculty members, and to those engaged in teaching.
Thus, it follows that the same personnel will be the "core faculty" in the initial process of generating a new or developing an existing curriculum.
In my opinion, this is certainly true for the initial or the preliminary stages, when the committee is still trying to generate the title of special research, and to establish an initial program.
In my opinion, however, once a title has been granted, or once a title has been
