The following table shows the results of the regression analysis for the dependent variable "Number of children in the household" (N = 1,000). The independent variables are "Age of the head of household" and "Gender of the head of household". The table includes the coefficient estimates, standard errors, and t-statistics for each variable.

It is important to note that the results of this study are based on a cross-sectional design. Therefore, the causal relationships between the variables cannot be definitively established. Future research should consider longitudinal designs to explore the temporal dynamics of these relationships.

1. The first step in the process is to identify the problem or issue that needs to be addressed. This involves gathering information and understanding the context of the problem.

These results suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated instrument to assess the prevalence of depression in the community is a feasible and reliable method for identifying the burden of depression in a population. The use of a single instrument also allows for comparison of results across studies and populations, which is important for understanding the global burden of depression.
