A Case of Cutaneous Melanoma with Metastasis

A 65-year-old male with a long history of skin cancer presented with a large, pigmented, ulcerated lesion on his left leg.

On physical examination, the lesion was a large, pigmented, ulcerated, and crusted plaque on the medial aspect of the left leg, measuring approximately 10 cm by 10 cm. The lesion was surrounded by a rim of erythema. The patient had a long history of skin cancer, including basal cell carcinoma, squamous cell carcinoma, and melanoma. He had also had a hysterectomy and oophorectomy. The patient was on chronic aspirin therapy. The lesion was biopsied, and the histopathologic findings were consistent with a large, pigmented, ulcerated, and crusted melanoma. The patient was treated with wide local excision and lymph node dissection. The patient is currently doing well, with no evidence of recurrence or metastasis.

The patient was followed up for 12 months, and the lesion did not recur. The patient is currently doing well, with no evidence of recurrence or metastasis.
