

John Henry 1844

The argument is directed against the common notion that the law of the land is the only source of the power of the government. It is shown that the power of the government is derived from the people, and that the law of the land is only a declaration of the will of the people. The power of the government is not derived from the law of the land, but from the people. The law of the land is only a declaration of the will of the people, and the power of the government is derived from the people. The law of the land is only a declaration of the will of the people, and the power of the government is derived from the people. The law of the land is only a
 people.
