Dear Doris:

I enclose a copy of the letter I have just received from Castalia. You were right. They drive a hard bargain. The University Press can not accept the second clause: that the rights go to Castalia who then gives the University the right to distribute a part of the edition. Under the circumstances it would probably be better to go back to the original idea: to have Castalia print a small edition (500) and have these distributed in Chile. If any further editions are contemplated new arrangements can be made. What do you think? I will call you some time next week.

*Much love,
Margaret*
