Dear Doris,

Ever since I learned of Miss Mistral's passing away from the New York Times Magazine I thought of writing to you and never did it. I felt that I knew so little about the ways you had in common, little about her and what she meant to your work and life. I remember the brief note in that 1946 issue of "New France" that a great deal of your work is represented by translations of hers; the letters you wrote to me, always indicating that you were with her.

It seems to me now as if from the few verses reprinted in The Times I learned more about her than through the
