

Commentary | Editorial

As the Journal of Management Inquiry (JMI) enters its 21st year, we are pleased to have a new editorial board. We have lost two members, but we have gained two new members. We are pleased to have the following members on our editorial board:

Dr. Robert Giacalone, University of Massachusetts Lowell, is a professor of management and director of the Center for Corporate and Social Performance. He has published numerous articles on corporate social responsibility and corporate social performance. He is also the author of the book Corporate Social Responsibility: The Theory and Practice of Sustainable Organizations (Sage, 2003).

Dr. David M. McCabe, University of North Carolina at Charlotte, is an associate professor of management and director of the Center for Business Ethics. He has published numerous articles on corporate social responsibility and corporate social performance. He is also the author of the book Corporate Social Responsibility: The Theory and Practice of Sustainable Organizations (Sage, 2003).

Dr. Michael J. Sirgy, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, is a professor of management and director of the Center for Business Ethics. He has published numerous articles on corporate social responsibility and corporate social performance. He is also the author of the book Corporate Social Responsibility: The Theory and Practice of Sustainable Organizations (Sage, 2003).

Dr. Jeffrey Pfeffer, University of California at Berkeley, is a professor of management and director of the Center for Business Ethics. He has published numerous articles on corporate social responsibility and corporate social performance.
