Chlorophyll a and b in the leaves of Sedum is not only produced in the leaves but in the roots as well. In leaves that are grown under light, the chlorophyll a and b are produced in the leaves, but in leaves that are grown in darkness, the chlorophyll a and b are produced in the roots. This is because the roots are in contact with the soil, which contains the chlorophyll a and b produced in the leaves. The chlorophyll a and b are produced in the roots and then move to the leaves through the vascular system.
