Una de las causas del problema, según afirma el profesor, reside en que el crecimiento económico en Vietnam, al convertirse en un proceso de tipo "burbuja", ha atraído a muchos inversores extranjeros, pero la mayoría de ellos no están en condiciones de pagar el impuesto sobre el valor añadido (IVA) que se aplica a las importaciones y exportaciones. Desde esa perspectiva, la inversión extranjera en el país, al haberse multiplicado, también ha generado importantes problemas de gestión económica, a consecuencia de los que el gobierno decidió, a principios de los noventa, reducir el IVA de 10 por ciento a 5 por ciento. Al mismo tiempo, se incrementó el número de empresas y, al haberse creado una alta concentración de empresas, surgió el problema de pagar el IVA. En consecuencia, los impuestos sobre el valor añadido se han convertido en el mayor de los problemas de la economía vietnamita.
