These findings were also confirmed by a study conducted by the American Psychological Association, which found that people who are exposed to violence are more likely to experience mental health problems, such as post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), depression, and anxiety.

The new 1980s are characterized by a growing awareness of the need for more effective communication with the public. This is reflected in the growing importance of public relations departments in large organizations. The public relations department is now seen as a key part of the organization's overall strategy. It is responsible for creating and maintaining a positive image for the organization. This is done through a variety of means, including press releases, news stories, and public appearances by key executives.
 The public relations department also plays a role in crisis management.
 It is responsible for developing and implementing a crisis communication plan. This plan outlines the steps to be taken in the event of a crisis, such as a product recall or a major accident. The public relations department also monitors the media for any negative coverage of the organization.
 If such coverage is found, the department will work to correct the record and restore the organization's reputation.

The author has written two books on business management, one on the subject of organization and control, and another on the subject of personnel management.
